

Charities That Don't Test on Animals

Frequently Asked Questions

What Types of Charities Are on the "Don't Test" List?

Health charities and service organizations that do not conduct or fund experiments on animals are included on the "don't test" list. These organizations deal with human health issues ranging from birth defects to cancer to substance abuse. Some fund non-animal research to find treatments and cures for diseases and disabilities, while others provide services and direct care to people living with physical or mental ailments.

How Does a Charity Get on the List?

Charities that are listed have signed a statement of assurance put forth by PETA or the Council on Humane Giving certifying that neither they nor their affiliated organizations conduct or fund any experiments on animals and will not do so in the future. The Council on Humane Giving joins together nine animal protection organizations, including PETA and the Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine (PCRM). The Council formed to help health charities publicize their policy of supporting only non-animal research or providing direct services and care and to allow donors to easily identify such charities, with the newly developed Humane Charity Seal of Approval. Charities that are marked with this symbol * have already signed onto the Humane Charity Seal of Approval program. Charities marked with this symbol ($) are presently observing a moratorium on (i.e., current suspension of) animal experiments.

Please encourage charities that are not participating in the Humane Charity Seal of Approval program to contact the Council on Humane Giving at 202-686-2210, extension 329, or via e-mail at humaneseal@pop.net. They can find all the details about the program at www.humaneseal.org.

Contact PETA if you know the address of a charity that is not listed, including local health service organizations. PETA will be happy to inquire about a charity's animal testing policy, but we also encourage you to inquire, as it is important that charities hear directly from compassionate citizens who are opposed to animal testing.

How Often Are PETA's Charity Lists Updated?

Lists are updated approximately every two to four months. They are based on the most current information available at the time of printing. PETA reserves the right to choose which charities will be included, based on charity policy. Inclusion on any list is not an endorsement of an organization and/or any of its programs by PETA. Please contact PETA if you have any questions about the status of listed charities.

The following health charities and service organizations DO NOT conduct or fund animal experiments. They may deal with several issues, including nonhealth-related issues, but they are listed according to their primary health focus. For more information on the programs and activities of an organization, please contact the organization.
